

PEPP Talk . . .

working beyond Saskatchewan

This PEPP Talk will provide information on varying pension legislation and how the differences may affect you.

Jurisdiction is the power or right to govern an area, such as: legislation.

Legislation is a law, or set of laws, made by a government.

Provincial jurisdiction

Each province sets their own rules and parameters surrounding pensions. Your province of employment has jurisdiction over the pension legislation that applies to your account. (Please note: there are some exceptions to this rule. See page 3 to see the parameters around Federal pension legislation)

What does pension legislation regulate?

Pension legislation sets the rules surrounding things like:

- vesting;
- termination options;
- definition of a spouse;
- pre-retirement death benefit;
- post-retirement survivor; and
- retirement income options, etc.

How do I know which pension jurisdiction and legislation applies to my pension?

Pension jurisdiction is determined by your province of employment at termination. If you are currently employed, and contributing to a pension plan, your province of work is your pension jurisdiction.

If you are no longer actively contributing, your pension jurisdiction is the province you were working in on the date you terminated employment (stopped contributing to a pension plan). The legislation from that jurisdiction will apply to your pension accumulated while working in that province.

Example:

If you were working in Alberta when you terminated your employment, the province of Alberta would be your pension jurisdiction and Alberta pension legislation would apply your pension.

The plan provisions described in this PEPP Talk are contained in Saskatchewan pension legislation.

What if I worked in more than one province over my career and was a member of multiple pension plans?

If you worked in more than one province or contributed to multiple pension plans, portions of your pension money may be subject to different legislation. It is important to remember that provincial jurisdiction is determined by the date you terminated employment (ceased to be an active member in a plan).

Example:

Tina worked in Ontario and was a member of a pension plan. Then she terminated her employment (ceased to be a member of the Ontario pension plan), got a job in Saskatchewan and started contributing to the Public Employees Pension Plan (PEPP).

Because Tina contributed to pension plans in two different provinces (pension jurisdictions), portions of her pension money will be subject to different legislation. The pension money Tina earned in Ontario would be subject to Ontario legislation and the pension money she earned as a PEPP member would be subject to Saskatchewan legislation; even if she combined her two pension accounts into PEPP.

Why does it matter which pension jurisdiction applies to my pension?

Knowing which pension jurisdiction applies matters, because the rules surrounding things like vesting and termination may differ between jurisdictions and it is important to know which jurisdiction's legislation applies to your pension.

It's also important to remember that all PEPP communication materials are based on Saskatchewan pension legislation so the information presented may not apply to you if you are subject to another pension jurisdiction.

To help members compare how plan provisions are affected by differing pension legislation, we created the Working Beyond Saskatchewan matrix. (See appendix A to view the Working Beyond Saskatchewan Matrix on page 6 and 7)

Additional scenarios

I worked in Saskatchewan and contributed to PEPP for 35 years before retiring and moving to Manitoba. Once in Manitoba I got a part-time job, and started contributing to a Manitoba pension plan, while continuing to withdraw my pension from PEPP. Which province's pension legislation applies to me?

The pension money earned while contributing to PEPP would be subject to Saskatchewan legislation and any pension money earned while contributing to a Manitoba pension plan would be subject to Manitoba legislation.

I worked in Ontario for my entire career, but since retiring I have moved to British Columbia. Which province's pension legislation applies to me?

Your pension would be subject to Ontario legislation since it is the last place you were contributing to a pension plan before retiring.

I live and worked in Alberta my entire life and converted to PEPP from the Capital Pension Plan. I am planning my retirement and am interested in the Variable Pension Benefit (VPB) PEPP administrators.

If you retire in Alberta, your pension is under Alberta jurisdiction and Alberta legislation. Therefore, PEPP cannot provide VPB administration for your pension. PEPP can only administer VPB to members if they retire or terminate employment in Saskatchewan.

Federal Jurisdiction

Pension legislation in Prince Edward Island and the Territories falls under Federal jurisdiction. There are also some industries that fall under Federal jurisdiction regardless of which provinces the member is based.

What are some examples of federally regulated industries?

- Broadcasting;
- telecommunications;
- chartered banks;
- postal service;
- airports & air transportation; and
- businesses in the Territories and on First Nations and certain Crown Corporations.

Why is there different legislation for each province?

Unique pension regulations exist because each province was established at a different time and therefore established their own provincial pension legislation.
